

Direct and indirect abuse – exploring the implications

How have social media changed the face of hate crime

A one-day conference organised jointly by Stop Hate UK and NSCAP for everyone working with abuse, bullying and hate crime in the internet age.

Date: 10th September 2014

Time: 09:30 - 16:00

Venue: NSCAP, Bevan House, 34-36 Springwell Road, Leeds LS1 1AW

Cost: £40 (lunch included)

Overview

For the second year Stop Hate UK and NSCAP are working together to offer an inspirational and informative conference for people concerned about current issues in abuse, bullying and hate crime.

We are pleased to welcome back Ted Bowman, educator, author and consultant from Minnesota who is joined by Professor Carsten Maple, School of Applicable Computing, University of Bedfordshire, and Jason B Kaushal, Child and Adolescent Psychotherapist, NSCAP. The conference will be chaired by Helen Shaw, Co-Director of Inquest.

Aims of the conference

Hateful acts can be direct or indirect, on the street or via social media, said directly or second-hand, deliberately or naively unintended. However it occurs, it is wrong and it hurts individuals, families, neighbourhoods and communities.

The internet and social media have brought new and different dimensions to bullying, stalking and hate crime that need to be carefully considered by anyone engaged in this area of work including educators, criminal justice, social workers, mental health services and charities supporting victims. This one-day interactive conference will explore these issues from different perspectives to try and understand the implications for hate crime and abuse in the age of social media.
